Our English teacher was like a friend to us, and we all liked her. One day she came into the classroom and shouted, "Who did this?" She held up a piece of broken glass and asked, "Who 1 the window?" She seldom became angry, but this time she was.

I broke the window. I had done that by throwing a baseball. I didn't want to admit it because I didn't have enough money to pay for a big window like that. "My father will be 2," I thought. At first I didn't put up my hand, but later something strong in my heart suddenly made me stand up. "I did it," I said 3. How difficult it was for me to say that!

My teacher took a book from one of our book shelves and then began walking towards my desk. I was afraid that she was going to punish me.

"I know you like collecting 4 very much," she said, looking down at my nervous face. "Here is the book about collecting stamps that you are looking for. Now, the book is yours and I shall not punish you. Remember, it's because you told the truth."

I couldn't believe it! My teacher wasn't punishing me. I didn't 5 to pay for the broken window. And I got my favorite book!

As time goes, the book is 6, so is my wonderful teacher. But I will never forget the lesson the teacher gave me that day.
